ROLL & HILL LAUNCHES NEW LIGHTING COLLECTION BY POST COMPANY

New York, NY – On February 22, Brooklyn-based lighting and furniture company Roll & Hill will launch the Bell Collection, a new series of lighting designed by Post Company. Post Company, also based in Brooklyn, is design studio led by architects, interior designers, and other creatives known for projects such as Scribner’s Catskill Lodge and The Lake House on Canandaigua.

The Bell collection was originally designed for INNESS, a 225-acre hotel, restaurant and semi-private country club in the Hudson Valley founded by hospitality impresario, Taavo Somer, and designed, conceived, and developed in partnership with Post Company.

This new lighting collection was inspired by the Bell Jar Lantern, popularized in 18th-century Georgian manors. The bell jar shape encapsulates the candle, protecting the light source from drafts and elements. When the design was adopted in America, architects added a bell cap to capture the candle smoke and prevent the blackening of the ceiling and walls. Post Company’s selection of finishes (unlacquered brass and blackened brass), traditional blown glass and hidden technology connections embrace modernity, while maintaining the profile of the classic fixture.

“Roll & Hill is the ideal partner as they understand the implication of scale, the importance of subtle details and are willing to work iteratively to get the design right.” says Leigh Salem, a partner of Post Company.

The collection consists of four pieces – a single pendant, double pendant, flush mount pendant, and a wall sconce – which range in price from $1,680-$3,725 Each piece is available in unlacquered brass or blackened brass, 120v or 240v.
